There are many historic buildings in Tokyo that were lost to disasters in the past such as the Great Fire of Meireki in the Edo period, the Great Kanto Earthquake, and the Bombing of Tokyo. The Edo-Tokyo Open Air Architectural Museum restores, preserves, and relocates buildings with high cultural value. The museum also introduces exhibits of traditional life and culture in various historical periods. Our mission is to pass on these valuable cultural heritages to the next generation. We hope you take a moment to learn about the people of the past and imagine what life was like at the time.
